

Book List 2017

Moral Principles in Education by John Dewey

Anti-Education by Friedrich Nietzsche*

Liberal Anxieties and Liberal Education by Alan Ryan

The Laws of Medicine by Siddhartha Mukherjee*

Anatomies: A Cultural History of the Human Body by Hugh Aldersey-Williams

The Relativity of Wrong by Isaac Asimov

Hollow Earth by David Standish

The Technocratic Antarctic by Jessica O'Reilly*

The World Will Follow Joy by Alice Walker

The Moon is Always Female by Marge Piercy

Nine Horses by Billy Collins

West Wind by Mary Oliver

After by Jane Hirshfield

Animal Soul by Bob Hicok

The Art and Craft of Poetry by Michael J. Brugeja*

A Man Without A Country by Kurt Vonnegut

(Reflections on Violence) by Hannah Arendt (essay)

The Name of God is Mercy by Andrea Tonielli*

The Short Stories of F. Scott Fitzgerald*

The Mysterious Stranger by Mark Twain*

<0>>.<0>).<0>>.<0>.<0>)).<<0>.<<0>))

(this year's list is shorter than last years')

recorded at the end of the year; this list felt father from me than the others, not recording as I went along.

*not fully read—maybe don't worry, but most students in college don't ever bother reading an entire book all the way through, and instead do what they need for their course work alone; I like to read an entire book through, hopefully not just because of this, and have noted this.. Organization of the book lists and references; the lists kept throughout the year or those compiled at the end of it; which made work flow easier in study? The books I took notes on and didn't finish, the missing books that only a small reference was necessary from, the ones quoted directly or indirectly: "more than half"--the sense of merit for application to a book list—this must be...the goal is to study for the sake of study itself: I end up studying for my own study, rather than actual knowledge itself?

?

book lists/reference/bibliography

book lists=entirely or mostly finished references usually include anything referred to at all or even read in very small part.

Bibliography like reference, but more specific to a piece of work alone

?